Do animals dream? Once scientists thought only people could dream. But now they have changed their minds. Animals need to dream, just like people. If you see a cat or a dog move or make a noise while it is sleeping, it is probably dreaming. Even small animals, like mice and hamsters, dream. Horses sleep and dream while they are standing. An albatross – a big sea bird – can sleep while it is flying, and it probably dreams at the same time. Only hibernating animals (animals which sleep for the whole winter and don't wake up until spring) don't dream. But when they wake up in the spring, they will return to their normal lifestyle of work, rest and play; and when they sleep, they will dream again. What do animals dream about? Nobody knows! But probably, just like us, some of their dreams are good – and some are not!

- Once scientists believed that animals didn't dream.
- Now scientists believe animals dream.
- Cats and dogs don't dream.
- Only big animals dream.
- Horses dream when they wake up.
- One sea bird can fly and sleep at the same time.
- 'Hibernate' means 'sleep for all the winter'.
- Hibernating animals sleep but don't dream.
- We don't know what animals dream about.
- Probably animals only have bad dreams.
